

Library Philosophy

Today's school library is a learning commons where students and teachers investigate, collaborate, seek and use information to explore ideas and solve problems. As information grows exponentially and technology continues to change the way society learns and communicates, the school library is more important than ever now. The 21st century library must maintain a well-balanced, high-quality collection and provide access to materials and expertise in physical and digital forms both within and outside the school. The collection should develop and strengthen students' curiosity and inquiry, and support diverse points of view.

The Library-media specialist collaborates with teachers to ensure that skills associated with multiple literacies, are guides students and assists teachers to use a broad range of appropriate tools, resources, and information technologies to interpret, evaluate, create and use ideas in a variety of forms.
