Philosophy Statement

The skills and knowledge captured in the New Jersey Student Learning Standards for English Language Arts (NJSLS for ELA) are designed to prepare students for life outside the classroom. They include critical-thinking skills and the ability to closely and attentively read and write text in a way that will help them understand and become effective members of the workforce. Students will learn the necessary skills to become competent, independent readers and writers. Competency in reading and writing naturally leads to success in college, career, and life. The NJSLS for ELA lay out a clear vision of what it means to be a literate person who is prepared for success in the 21st century.

The recursive nature of English Language Arts instruction demands that standards be addressed at many levels and in many units throughout a grade level. Students will need to learn a strategy or skill, for example, and apply it in varying circumstances and within varying levels of text complexity.

The English Language Arts Instructional Block for grades K-5 is comprised of the following:

- Writer's Workshop
- Reader's Workshop

Components of “Writer’s Workshop”

The “Writer’s Workshop” model recognizes that to achieve maximum success, writing instruction must be differentiated. Units of study support certain types of writing skills. For example, the development of setting during a narrative unit or the development of a coherent argument during an opinion essay unit. Each writing unit moves through the writing process “cycle” of generating ideas, planning, drafting, revising, and editing. Teachers present skills related to each type of writing with each unit taking a prescribed number of days to complete. Sometimes parents wonder where and how grammar and punctuation lessons “fit” into “Writer’s Workshop”. These lessons occur during the editing phase of each unit.

Mini-Lesson (approximately 10 minutes)

During the mini-lesson segment, a teacher models a specific writing skill or strategy. For example during a unit on research, a teacher might show how a student can create a certain tone by the words the student selects. If students are arguing that stingrays should be a protected species, we may use words like “majestic” or “magnificent” in their essays. Though these words aren’t technically a part of the argument, they help to set a favorable tone for the stingray.

Independent Writing and Conferring, Small Group Instruction, and/or Assessments (approximately 20-25 minutes)

Following the mini-lesson, students will research, note-take, and/or write independently for 20-25 minutes. They may also use this time for peer revision and/or peer editing. While students work, they may apply the strategy that was just presented by the teacher, or perhaps apply another previously taught strategy from their writing “toolkits.”

Conferring is the core of the “Writer’s Workshop”. Teachers will meet with each student approximately one time per week. During this time, teachers are able to determine the student’s understanding of strategies that have been recently taught and/or teach a new skill specific to that child’s needs. For one writer, that skill might involve learning to “stretch out” an important moment in a story; for another, it might involve showing how to move through time with more subtlety (rather than, “the next day...the day after that...”). Naturally, the lesson depends on the student’s skill level as a writer in that particular unit. It is important to note that a student may be particularly strong in one area (for example, fiction), while struggling in another.

A teacher may also be facilitating a small group lesson. If a number of students are struggling with a similar skill – for example, “use of quotations”, then the teacher can form a small group together and re-teach the lesson to support their understanding.

Students are assessed both formally and informally throughout the school year. Informal assessments include writing conferences, small group conversations, and teacher observations. Formal assessments include strategy-checks, writing notebook collections, quizzes, the collection of writing folders (which contain drafts, revisions, and edits), and final publications. Students are assessed on all elements of the writing process, not simply the final product.

Share (approximately 5-7 minutes)

Following the block of time allotted for independent writing, teachers will have a “share.” During this time, students can share their glows (successes) or struggles (grows) with a particular strategy. These shares are often instructional in nature. For example, a teacher may have taught a mini-lesson showing how to use a timeline as one tool to plan a narrative. During the “share,” a student may show the class how he or she used a storyboard or a mini-book to plan instead. Everyone benefits from this sharing of ideas. Teachers are encouraged to have a “Publication Party” at the end of each unit, giving students the chance to enjoy others' writing, as well as with their parents! This celebration provides an authentic audience for their writing efforts, and acts as powerful motivation for each writer to strive for his or her best.

Components of “Reader’s Workshop”

“Readers Workshop” is a teaching method in which the goal is to teach students strategies for reading and comprehension. The workshop model allows teachers to differentiate and meet the needs of all their students. “Readers Workshop” helps to foster a love of reading and gives students chances to practice reading strategies independently and with guidance. It provides students with a supportive environment that involves them in authentic reading experiences that focus on the strengths and needs of individual students. “Readers Workshop” helps students develop strong reading skills through the use of a mini-lesson, shared reading, read aloud, conferencing, independent reading, paired reading, literature response, and sharing. The basic philosophy behind the “Readers Workshop” is to allow students to spend an extended amount of time reading authentic texts that interest them on a daily basis and to provide opportunities to talk about literature. The ultimate goal of a “Readers Workshop” is always to develop life-long passionate readers. “Readers Workshop” helps to foster a love of reading and gives students chances to practice reading strategies independently and with guidance.

Read Aloud (10 minutes)

The teacher reads orally and invites active listening and participation from the children. Longer, more diverse, and more complicated texts are selected to provide a rich experience of literature. This provides an excellent opportunity for additional modeling of reading and response strategies. It also offers closure for the reading workshop within the community.

Mini-Lesson (10 minutes)

Lesson topics are determined by the needs of the class as well as the curriculum. Lessons are brief, whole group, and always involve teaching a specific reading skill or strategy. Topics vary, but typically address the following: procedures, literary craft, reading and comprehension strategies, response, and conventions. During a mini-lesson, teachers model for the students a specific reading skill or strategy.

Independent Reading and Conferencing, Small Group Instruction via Guided Reading, Book Clubs, and/or Assessments (20-25 minutes)

As the children select new books or retrieve ones they are still reading from their book boxes, the teacher asks each student what she or he will be reading. This provides an excellent opportunity for a brief conference with every child about her or his reading and the books she or he has chosen. It also provides a reliable assessment tool by which the teacher can monitor self-selection and provide guidance when necessary. Once the children have selected their books and conferred with the teacher, they are expected to read silently and independently. While many primary age children vocalize while reading and may need the support of reading orally with a partner, silent independent reading remains the goal. Silent reading provides the teacher with guaranteed time to meet with individuals and small groups for assessment, guidance, remediation, and enrichment. If a number of students are struggling with a similar skill—say, making predictions based on what we know about a character—then a teacher may form a small group and re-teach the lesson from a different angle. As well, a teacher may form small groups as an enrichment opportunity for strong readers, challenging them with higher-level skills. During a conference, the teacher meets with individual children to talk about their reading and offer brief individual instruction in an informal conversation that may last from 8-10 minutes. Conferences focus on the individual needs of every child, so no two conferences are alike, although the conversation always surrounds books the child has recently been reading. Occasionally, the teacher groups 4 or 5 children according to their instructional needs and forms a book club. The teacher is then able to address these needs with a common text following a lesson structure that involves preparation for reading, independent reading, and response. Most often, book clubs meet over the course of two or more days. As children become more sophisticated readers, the book club format becomes increasingly independent. Students are assessed both formally and informally throughout the school year. Informal assessments include reading conferences, small group conversations, and teacher observations (i.e.: Does the student consistently choose texts within his/her level of understanding?) Formal assessments include strategy-checks, Reading Journal collections, homework checks, book club conversation reports, quizzes, presentations, and reading tests.

Share (10-15 minutes)

The children are invited to respond to their reading in both oral and written ways. During this time, students can share their successes or struggles with a particular strategy. These shares are often instructional in nature as well. For example, a teacher may have taught a mini-lesson on organizational strategies for note taking from nonfiction text. During the “share,” students may show the class their own note-taking strategies. This helps to increase everyone’s skill repertoire. Every day the children meet with a friend for book talks, brief conversations that share reactions and responses to reading. About once a week, the children write more formal responses in journals or traditional book reviews. The children write independently and freely, although the teacher occasionally provides a prompt to guide the response. Connections between reading and writing are encouraged. Written responses are always shared with peers and the teacher in order to maintain purpose and audience.

A “Balanced Writing Program” is made up of three components:

1. Modeled writing
2. Shared writing
3. Independent writing

“Modeled Writing” is writing TO students

“Shared Writing” is writing WITH students

“Independent Writing” is writing BY students

What is Modeled Writing?

“Modeled Writing” is a teaching strategy that is designed to teach specific skills to the whole group through the process of the teacher modeling their writing in front of the students.

What Does “Modeled Writing” Look Like?

- Teacher demonstrates writing
- Teacher thinks aloud while writing
- Writing is done in front of the students
- Students observe and listen as the teacher writes
- Teaching points are demonstrated in the context of writing

Why Do “Modeled Writing”?

Just as reading aloud to students provides a good “reading model,” the “writing model” is just as critical when teaching writing.

When modeling writing to students they will learn the following:

- How to set purposes for writing (Why am I writing this and what is it about?)
- Defining the audience (Who do I want to read this?)
- Organizing information
- Using phonics and spelling patterns
- Revising
- Editing

What Is Shared Writing?

“Shared Writing” is another name for Interactive Writing. It is a way of introducing students to writing through writing.

What Does “Shared Writing” Look Like?

- Teacher and students write together
- Both teacher and students have input into the content of the writing
- Teacher uses the pen or students share the pen with teacher support
- Skill and strategy lessons are included
- Usually done with the whole class

Why Do “Shared Writing”?

Shared Writing exposes students to different forms of writing. Shared Writing can serve as a tool for helping students accomplish an activity they can't yet do on their own - it bridges the way to independent writing.

Students will learn the following from “Shared Writing”:

- Writing is a form of communication
- Writing informs others
- Design and format of writing can differ based on the purpose of writing
- That sequence is important
- Writing can be changed and revised
- Writing conventions, such as punctuation, capitalization, and grammar
- How to “stretch out” words to listen for different letters, letter combinations and sounds – phonological awareness
- Concepts of print
- The value of strategies such as rereading to check, confirm, or add to the writing

What Is Independent Writing?

“Independent Writing” is the chance for students to practice what they have learned in “Modeled” and “Shared Writing”.

What Does “Independent Writing” Look Like?

- Students write independently
- Usually this is a time when students write in their writer’s notebook
- While students are independently writing, the teacher uses this time to conference with students
- Students may be doing different things during Independent Writing time – planning, writing, editing, revising, or publishing
- Teacher support is given during writing conferences
- The teacher can use their students’ independent writing pieces to assess progress, and see areas of strength and weakness.
- The teacher can use their students’ independent writing pieces as instructional aids for the whole group

Why Do “Independent Writing”?

“Independent Writing” is the backbone of any writing program. Without it, students would never have a chance to practice the skills needed to become better writers. Without the opportunity to write students wouldn’t have the chance to express themselves and communicate their ideas with the world around them.

Students will learn the following from “Independent Writing”:

- We learn to write by writing
- The more students write the better they become
- Students learn that writing is a form of communication
- Writing can serve as an “outlet” for students’ imagination and provide an avenue for creativity
- With independent writing experiences, students will be able to organize what they want to say, discover the vocabulary with which to say it, use structure in writing it, and strengthen their ability to create pieces of writing that have meaning and voice
- Students learn that writing serves different purposes
- Students become better spellers through writing

- When students reread their writing, whether it's the first time or fifth time, they are increasing their reading skills

Conferencing Tips

- Record the date of each conference so you don't forget to confer with any students.
- Meet with students according to their individual needs.
- Conferences can take place during any stage of the writing process. They do not need to be only after the first draft has been finished, but can occur during planning, drafting, revising, or editing.
- Fit conference time into the independent practice portion of the Writer's Workshop.
- For longer pieces of writing, you may choose to read the writing before class to know what your teaching points will be.
- Redefine your idea of a conference.
  - It can be 45 seconds long or 5 minutes long.
  - It can be held in various locations.
  - You can walk over to a student's desk for an individual conference, meet with a small group of students, or meet with one student at a designated table and have another student "on deck."
- Always be prepared to spread yourself thin; that's the nature of writing conferences.
- Use a common language/repeated terms and phrases:
  - What would you like to talk about today?
  - Is there something you are proud of?
  - Is there something you want help with?
  - Let me show you how a writer... (spells... a particular word, uses commas, capitalizes proper nouns, etc.)
  - One thing writers do, is.... (add dialogue, include figurative language, make sure they use a variety of sentence structures, etc.)
  - This is a glow (something done well).
  - Here is a grow (something to work on

Conferencing Materials

Teachers should create a teacher binder or notebook of conferencing materials – the following should be included:

- A class list - to keep track of which students you have conferenced with
- Conferencing Recording Sheets- several copies for each student
- The Grammar Guide- use this to show students examples of various grammar skills during a conference as needed
- Rubrics- reviewing the bullet points can help you choose teaching points

In your conferencing area, cart or bin you should have:

- A “Focus Skills Chart” - hang a piece of chart paper at the beginning of each unit and list the focus skills as they are taught (noted in the lessons); use these to help select teaching points
- Small dry erase board and dry erase markers or demonstration purposes
- Sharpened pencils
- Highlighters
- Sticky notes
- A timer to help keep you from spending too much time with one student or group
- Extra sound cards or privacy folders
- Extra red and blue pens
- Extra paper

Hindering vs. Helping

Question: What is equally important to teaching students how to write?

Answer: Creating a supportive environment in which learners feel confident to develop their writing.

There is no great mystery to promoting writing within your classroom. Just like anything, you learn by doing. Your students learn to write by writing. The more students write, the better they will become. In addition to the frequency of writing, there are several ways you can help expand an average writer to an excellent writer.

Helping

- ✓ Supportive classroom environment
- ✓ Writing is valued and celebrated
- ✓ A regular block of time is assigned for writing
- ✓ Writers know why they are writing and for whom they are writing
- ✓ Having opportunities for free choice writing
- ✓ Writers deciding the length of their writing
- ✓ Knowing what good writing looks like
- ✓ Knowing what good writing sounds like
- ✓ Receiving feedback
- ✓ Having writing tools
- ✓ Presenting writing as a social, not solitary, activity

Hindering

- Alphabetical dictionaries (helpful when editing, hindering during daily writing)
- Solely using writing prompts
- Trying to spell accurately at all times
- Sporadic amounts of writing time
- Insufficient length of writing time

Timing of the Pre /Post Assessments

- The pre-assessment for grades 1 -5 should be administered at the end of Unit
- The same prompt will be assigned for both the pre -test and post -test.
- You may suggest that the students write about it differently on the post -test, but that is not necessary.

Directions for Administering the Pre/ Post Assessments

- Read the prompt to your students, but do not prepare them for the topic with any group lessons, such as: reading trade books; having class discussions; or creating a web, map, or any kind of graphic organizer on the topic being assigned.
- Suggest to students that they plan before writing. Do not, however, suggest a type of plan or create a plan as a class.
- This is an un-timed test, designed to be completed in one sitting. If your students need a short break to use the bathroom or stretch, that is fine. However, please limit the writing to basically one class period.
- The students will be provided a space for planning, plus a piece of paper lined on both sides.
- Tell the students that they may use additional sheets of the lined paper, if needed.
- Staple the pages for each student together - the name will only appear on the first page.

Page 1 of all grade levels (except K) will include:

- prompt
- explanation of scoring:
  - tell about your ideas.
  - organize your work with a beginning, middle, and end.
  - use details.
  - use correct grammar, spelling, punctuation, and capitalization.
- A blank space at the bottom of the page with this heading:
  - Use this page to plan before you begin writing.

Page 2 of all grade levels (except K) is a piece of paper lined on both sides.

Scoring the Pre/Post Assessments

Use the rubrics from Unit 5 to score both the pre and post assessments. Use the Unit 3a rubric to score the Kindergarten assessments. Be sure to score the assessments precisely based on what the students demonstrate in their writing. Remember that the pretest is a baseline that can be used for comparison and to show growth throughout the year.

Kindergarten Pre & Post Writing Prompt:

“Tell about a time when you helped someone.”
