Cook's Counselor Corner

We all have things that we worry about, some small and some big. Health concerns, bills, scheduling and timing, family members, work, the future and countless more. Oftentimes we forget that kids have worries too.

Kid worries often get dismissed by adults. We do not purposefully do it, but in the grand scheme of worries they do not make the cut. We forget that in a kids world these things are BIG worries! For instance: whether or not they will get to sit by a friend at lunch, forgetting an assignment at home, will it be indoor or outdoor recess today? Too often our responses though good-intentioned, end up dismissing the BIG worries of our kids. We say, "You will have plenty of friends to sit by at lunch!", "Don't worry, you can just bring it tomorrow.", and "It doesn't matter if it is indoor or outdoor, you will get your recess today!"

A simple validation of feelings can make all the difference! Next time, try to stop and think about what the kid is probably feeling and identify that and try to make a suggestion to meet the need. "I hear that you are really worried that you won't get to sit by Johnny at lunch today. How about we try to line you up close to each other so you will at least end up at the same table." Often it is a simple thing that can help alleviate worries for kids.
