Internet Safety

It's winter. It's cold and dark. Everyone is bored. This time of year it seems kids are spending a little more time indoors on computers and tablets or in front of the TV. It's easy to do. Do you know what your kids are watching or accessing on the internet? Here are a few tips and resources to help keep your kids safe and help you monitor what they are watching.

Common Sense Media is a fantastic resource for all things tech. I use this site often when I have questions about good websites or videos for kids. Their website contains an article explaining everything you need to know about Parental Controls for all devices. This is a great way to ensure that your kids are not accessing inappropriate material on the internet. You can read all about it here:

Another good way to use Common Sense Media's website is to see how they rate and give recommendations on the appropriateness of movies currently in theaters and on DVD. In addition you can find Video Game reviews. These can be found under the Videos tab or using this link:
